The screenshot shows the Taylor & Francis Online article page. The article title is "Facebook, social integration and informal learning at university: 'It is more for socialising and talking to friends about work than for actually doing work'". The authors are Clare Madge, Julia Meek, Jane Wellens, and Tristram Hooley. The page number is 141. The article is available in full text. The abstract states: "Whilst recent studies suggest that over 95% of British undergraduate students are regularly using social networking sites, we still know very little about how this phenomenon impacts on the student experience and, in particular, how it influences students' social integration into university life. This paper explores how pre-registration engagement with a university Facebook network influences students' post-registration social networks. Research was conducted with first year undergraduates at a British university using an online survey. Students reported that they specifically joined Facebook pre-registration as a means of making new friends at university, as well as keeping in touch with friends and family at home. The survey data also illustrate that once at university, Facebook was part of the 'social glue' that helped students settle into university life. However, care must be taken not to over-privilege Facebook: it is clearly only one aspect of students' more general social networking practices and face-to-face interrelationships and interactions remain important. Students thought Facebook was used most importantly for social reasons, ...". The page also includes a table of contents, a list of further reading, and a list of references.

2016 JAN 1 (VerticalNews) -- By a News Reporter-Staff News Editor at Energy Weekly News -- Investigators discuss new findings in Energy Research. According to news reporting originating from Hong Kong, People's Republic of China, by VerticalNews correspondents, research stated, "This paper presents a combined daylight, airflow network and building energy simulation of a Public Rental Housing (PRH) development in Hong Kong to fulfil the requirement of the local green building guidance. The numerical modelling results are partly validated by on-site measurements during the period with the highest monthly average outdoor temperature."

Our news editors obtained a quote from the research from Hong Kong Polytechnic University, "Different ventilation control strategies are simulated to optimize natural ventilation performance. The simulation results show that the full-day ventilation strategy contributes to a lower average and peak indoor temperatures compared to the non-ventilation and night-ventilation scenarios. The indoor operative temperature of a worst-case vacant flat lies under the upper 80% acceptability limits in ASHRAE 55 during 67.5% of the modelled period in July. On the other side, at least 95.6% of the habitable area in the case buildings is predicted to experience a higher average daylight factor of 1% compared with the local green building guidance."

According to the news editors, the research concluded: "Furthermore, the energy saving potential of the combined natural ventilation and daylight strategies is anticipated to be 51.9% for air-conditioning and 8.3% for lighting compared to a baseline building, respectively."

Troubleshooting

Q: Can I search for everything that are available in the databases subscribed by the library?

A: FIND@HKUL is a tool for discovering indexed information, it does not guarantee access to all full text articles retrieved.

In fact, full text accessibility depends on a number of contributing factors such as subscription coverage, source of the article, and occasional changes to the subscription platform and configuration on the vendor's side.

In many cases, the external changes are beyond the Libraries' knowledge and control.

Troubleshooting

Q: Can I have remote access to the ebooks and online articles subscribed by other local university libraries via Find@HKUL?

A: No. Remote access to non-HKUL electronic resources is restricted to the eligible users of the hosting libraries due to licensing agreement. Access to these electronic resources may be available within those libraries. You may apply for a JULAC card to visit and use the resources on-site.

The image shows a screenshot of the Google Scholar interface with several elements highlighted by red boxes and numbered circles (1-5) to guide the user through configuring HKUL settings.

1 (Red circle) points to the menu icon (three horizontal lines) in the top left corner of the Google Scholar header.

2 (Red circle) points to the "Library links" section in the left sidebar menu.

3 (Red circle) points to the search input field where "HKU" has been entered.

4 (Red circle) points to the checkbox next to "The University of Hong Kong - View It@HKUL", which is checked.

5 (Red circle) points to the "Save" button at the bottom right of the settings page.

The main content area shows the "Scholar Settings" page. Under the "Library links" section, there is a search bar with "HKU" entered. Below the search bar, a list of libraries is shown with checkboxes:

- ☐ Open WorldCat - Library Search
- ☐ Hasan Kalyoncu University - EBSCOFullText@HKULibrary
- ☐ Hung Kuang Univ - FullText@Hung Kuang U Lib
- ☒ The University of Hong Kong - View It@HKUL

At the bottom of the page, there is a "Save" button and an "Cancel" button.

1. Go to Settings
2. Choose Library Links
3. Search for "HKU"
4. Choose "The University of Hong Kong - View It @HKUL"
5. Save

The screenshot shows the Google Scholar interface. The search bar at the top contains the text "Social ties and health: The benefits of social integration". Below the search bar, the "Articles" section displays the search results. On the left, there are filters for "Any time", "Since 2020", "Since 2019", "Since 2016", and "Custom range...". Below these, there are sorting options: "Sort by relevance" and "Sort by date". The main article entry is titled "Social ties and health: The benefits of social integration" by "TE Seeman - Annals of epidemiology, 1996 - Elsevier". The abstract text follows: "This article explores the relationship between level of social integration and various aspects of health. A search of the literature published since the mid-1970s (under the MEDLINE key words, 'social ties', 'social network', 'social isolation', 'social environment') presented strong evidence that social integration leads to reduced mortality risks, and to a better state of mental health. The evidence on physical health outcomes is less conclusive. There is no consistent evidence that social integration affects the incidence of disease (at least for ...".
